

INFORMATION AND POWER IN HISTORY

International Conference Amsterdam
16-17 March 2017

Charles Jeurgens is professor of archival studies at the University of Amsterdam and advisor at the National Archives in The Hague. One of his special research-interests are the colonial and postcolonial archives, not only as intrinsic sources of information, but especially as object of investigation, since they are the embodiment of communication structures of the past. He has published several articles about archives as representations of former networked information and communication structures.